I have one part of a project that is working (ie, trunk), and another part that is not (suspect). I would like to merge the working part of the project into the working one, and merge the suspect part into a branch. Is it possible to do something like this? Or do I need to create 2 separate projects, and then 1 new project containing the merged project? A: I'd suggest to create a branch, merge both working and not working parts to it, and then merge the branch to the trunk. This way you do have a working codebase, yet the not-working part is isolated.

'Objectives. To assess the extent to which the content and typology of websites related to diet and weight can be identified and classified using various search terms related to weight loss. To discuss the implications of the current state of knowledge and identify future research directions.

Introduction. Increased rates of obesity and obesity-related disease, as well as an increase in the use of the Internet for health information and treatment have resulted in a focus on assessing the quality of information provided on the Internet, specifically with respect to weight and obesity-related conditions. However, the vast majority of data regarding online information is based on searches that identify the website, rather than the health concerns of the website owner. To date, few studies have specifically examined the quality of websites related to weight and obesity. We hypothesized that the quality of websites related to weight and obesity would be inadequate and that the quality and characteristics of websites that related to these conditions would be influenced by the advertising and/or authorship of these websites. To test these hypotheses, the websites of a general local health care system were searched, and the information on these websites was examined.

Search Terms. Eight separate search terms related to weight loss, dieting, and obesity were used in the search. The search terms were used as keywords in the meta tag of the website. An additional two search terms, i.e., "weight loss," and "diet," were searched in all search engines, and Google was searched for "weight loss" and "dieting." An additional search term, "weight loss," was also used to search the Canadian Cancer Society website.

Measurement. Data from each site was examined for the following information: (1) The purpose of the site was described using text taken directly from the website. To assist in this assessment, specific words and phrases that characterise the purpose of websites related to weight loss were identified and recorded as text. (2) A list of specific types of material, e.g., recipes, aids to specific weight loss, or therapeutic interventions, were enumerated as text on the website. (3) The level of detail that was provided was assessed. To aid in this assessment, the following specific items were recorded as text: (a) If the website included a definition of the medical condition (e.g., "obesity"), the term was recorded as text. (b) If the website included more than one definition of the medical condition (e.g., ◆
