Influence of second and third-order modulation on the visibility of image artifacts generated by pulse inversion harmonic imaging. The main cause of image artifacts generated by pulse inversion harmonic imaging is related to the nonlinearity of the transmit radio frequency (RF) system. One of the approaches to improve the image quality is to apply second order and third order RF modulation. In this work, this approach is evaluated numerically. It was found that the modulation of only second order can lead to quite small enhancements in visibility of image artifacts.
