Using text in a virtual world is probably among the most fascinating uses of AR (Augmented Reality) technology. Using text in a virtual world is probably among the most fascinating uses of AR technology because it is both a fundamental and a new way of interacting with the virtual world. Creating an experience that is enough to catch a user's imagination, can be a challenge. The problem becomes more important when technology like AR gets into the hands of a young user. Despite various prototypes of virtual world text interaction published by leading AR companies, very few have succeeded to actually capture the imagination of the users. Facebook's new Focus by Chomp mock-up is a good example of how AR works when a user is focussed, and that state of attention is taking place in an AR experience. The technology used in Focus by Chomp is the ARKit. In Focus by Chomp, if a user taps on a portrait, some text appears in the empty space, a few words. The text changes if the user moves his head, and appears clearer when you move his head closer. Even if you're in a zoomed view, the right part of the text is visible. The key points of Focus by Chomp: The virtual world object that catches a user's attention is a character, not a photo or a virtual object. The text that appears is not more than a few words. Moving your head directly towards the screen, the text appears. The larger the head you position, the bigger the words that appear. The character is dynamic, and what changes is the head, not the image. Just like an avatar of a character in an online game, there is a variation in the characters of the same model. Changing the character is easy, and affects just the words that appear. Focus by Chomp is only a proof of concept. Once the technology is on the market, the manufacturers are sure to add more features to the app. Once released, the app is just a text in a virtual world. Other functions can be added to the app, like gestures and sound. However, Focus by Chomp is a good start for any of the companies trying to make AR more practical and interesting. The companies that understand that AR needs to work with texts is the true success story

Young and starring Mel Harris, Jack Gilford, Karen Austin, Isabella Scappucci, Tom Sturridge, and Graham Patrick Martin. The film was released direct-to-video on November 4, 2000. Plot Jack (Harris) is the editor-in-chief of a small-time newspaper based in Buffalo, New York. His best friend, Steven, works as a mail room clerk. As the film begins, Jack is having a baby shower for his wife, Erin, who is expecting their first child. Jack is performing a reading for the baby shower, but halfway through his reading, a mysterious postal worker arrives and interrupts Jack's reading, claiming that he is lost and needs help. The postal worker reveals himself to be Jack's son, Danny, who is also a newspaper editor. Danny tells Jack that he is suffering from a rare disease, called "Durkee's Syndrome," and that he will live the rest of his life in constant pain. Danny then asks his father to step back from his career and live a normal life. Jack initially hesitates and thinks about keeping his career but ultimately agrees to Danny's demands. In the very next scene, Jack is at a nightclub drinking with his estranged wife, Erin, who is on the verge of filing for divorce because she thinks that the reason that Jack wants to give up his career is that he is having an affair with a woman named Joanne. When Joanne arrives at the nightclub, Jack becomes angry and starts arguing with her over the matter. However, Joanne disappears, causing Jack to believe that she was the woman from the other night. After Erin returns home, she is disgusted with her husband's behavior and begins an affair with Brad, her co-worker. Meanwhile, Jack has decided that he needs to change the way that he runs his newspaper. To accomplish this, he needs some new faces and new ideas, and he hires a couple of new people at his newspaper. Unfortunately, because of the personality differences and the age difference (Jack being in his 30s) between 6d1f23a050
