Repatriation means retracing the steps you made on the road to a final destination – or long-term housing. Some expatriates move for vocational reasons to set up a business or more sophisticated form of employment. Others move from one state or country to another to spend time with family or just to be near family and friends. Regardless of the reasons, most expatriates need to borrow money from a financial institution or friend to finance the move. The process of repatriation is similar to any other transaction. A transaction is the process of making or accepting a sale. Repatriation is making a large financial transaction in the reverse of an expatriate's normal lifestyle. The three main issues are: How much should you expect to repay Can you afford the repayments? Are you ready for the repayments? The average capitalization of an international move is between $100,000 and $200,000. Moving from a city like New York, Los Angeles, London or Singapore to a developing country can be between $90,000 and $120,000. Let's look at two recent examples of repatriation. Financial information for repatriation We move a family of four from New York to Mexico. There is no land involved. This transaction is a cash only transaction. At the start of the repatriation, the client had $100,000 in the bank. He gets a $50,000 loan. The remaining $50,000 is written off. Based on what he should expect to pay back and what he has
